POLICEMEN RETIRE.

When Mrs. Pittman quit her job Armstrong became angry. He refused to give up her trunks. Then Pittman, to make matters worse, attached the show for $1,200. The company came home without buying parlor-car accommodations.

In the mean time Pittman went away. He refused all of Armstrong's overtures looking toward peace. He did not get back to town until yesterday. As soon as he had time he went to the office in the Knickerbocker Building. He found that his name had been erased.

As Pittman entered the office, he says he held out his hand and expected to be greeted on friendly terms. Instead Armstrong shot up his right and landed a fine uppercut that put Pittman to sleep for a few seconds. When Pittman came for he pulled a revolver, but it was taken from him before he could use it. Armstrong is an athlete. He was once Corbett's trainer.
